Cybersex trafficking is a form of modern slavery that was unimaginable before the digital age. Cybersex trafficking is the live sexual abuse of children streamed via the internet, set up by adults who receive online payments from predators and pedophiles located anywhere in the world.

The Philippines government has made rapid strides in its fight against sex trafficking since IJM arrived in Manila in 2000. An IJM study found that there are 75% fewer minors being sold for sex from streets and bars in the areas where we have worked with authorities. Now, law enforcement officials need specialized training and support as they investigate and rescue children from cybersex trafficking, and survivors need specialized aftercare services and a long-term support system to thrive in freedom.

IJM MANILA PROGRESS SINCE 2000

- 600 women and children rescued from sexual violence
- 175 survivors of sexual abuse currently receiving aftercare services from IJM
- 116 criminals convicted for crimes related to sex trafficking or assault

We rescue victims by helping Philippines authorities and international law enforcement agencies identify and remove children from the places and people who are forcing them to perform sex acts for live or recorded shows broadcast online.

We bring perpetrators to justice. We help police investigate and document evidence so criminals exploiting children in front of webcams and profiting from the abuse are restrained. We help prosecutors press charges and navigate the anti-trafficking and cybercrime laws so impunity ultimately ends and others are deterred.

We restore survivors by creating customized care plans for each child. Cybersex trafficking victims have unique needs, tend to be quite young, and there are more boys than in bar- or street-based trafficking. Many survivors need to spend time in a shelter before returning home to their family or community. In addition to providing direct care and counseling, we are developing best practices and pioneering new tools for shelters handling cybersex trafficking cases.

We strengthen justice systems by providing hands-on mentoring and training for law enforcement and court officials investigating and reviewing criminals cases, and we equip social services and partner organizations that provide aftercare for sex trafficking survivors.

“If I would see or hear there is a victim of human trafficking, like us, I just want to comfort her. Help her to move forward because that’s the start, where I stand now.”
